DO YOU wish you could fill a tux like Daniel Craig or Pierce Brosnan? Would you like to be a suave, gun-toting super spy driving your Aston Martin in hot pursuit of an international bad guy and his henchmen? Do you find yourself dreaming of Ursula Andress or Halle Berry rising bikini-clad out of the ocean? Do you wish that you, too, could romance ludicrously named women? A new fragrance making its way to Australia to coincide with the latest Bond flick Quantum of Solace could be just what you need.

Floris 89, the signature fragrance of James Bond creator Ian Fleming, is a cologne that smells of orange and bergamot blended with lavender and neroli. It is "warmed with a touch of spicy nutmeg". You can smell like this for the handsome sum of $158 for 100ml by ordering at the www.ivyhouse.com.au website. Success with bedding women and/or fighting crime is not guaranteed.
